Second Annual Bedside Fishing Competition

By Bedside Staff Writer

It's time to cast your rods and pull up something fun fun fun! Last year, you all loved the Bedside Fishing Tournament so much—and there was only one injury—so we are bringing it back for the end of the month.

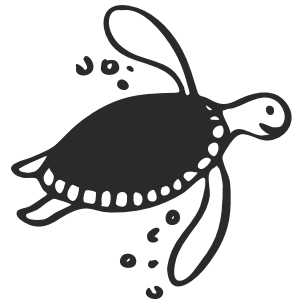

Last year Mr. Millar, rest in peace, won the fishing title, so it's fair game this year to see who can be the new reigning champion!

All rods will be provided by the arts and crafts center, and all bait will be provided by the kitchen. To answer Mr. Tip's letters, no, you cannot bring your own shark harpoons as the pond has no sharks. However, if you'd like to hear Mr. Tip's stories about extreme animal hunting, he says he is happy to show you his endangered pelt and tooth collection.

The winner this summer season will get special "Big Fish" seating in the breakfast pavilion for the rest of the summer. Worth it, huh? So you better win win win!

Note: Please remember that we cannot eat the fish since the acidic rain makes them toxic. Thank you for reading our notice.

The soon to be Young Mrs. Rapperson would like to remind people to please take their shoes off before entering her cottage. After the landslide two days ago, she doesn't want anyone tracking mud on her carpets. They're an engagement gift.

Young Mr. Rapperson would like to remind everyone that he has just gotten engaged and that he and soon to be Young Mrs. Rapperson are open to more gifts throughout the month of June.

Mr. Tip would like to decline Mr. Willie's Jenga request, as he thinks earthquakes do count. He would like to, however, still play put-put golf next Wednesday.

Mr. Tupper would like to know if anyone would like to speak investing with him. He has a new opportunity drilling off of Africa and he thinks other people may enjoy it too.

Mrs. Mackerson is starting her own new secret cribbage club, and would like to point out it in no way has anything to do with her disagreement with Mrs. Willie. Meet her tomorrow by the boat house if you want to sign up.
